Winter Scours Warning Aired By State Vets

HARRISBURG — The cold winds that force cattle into barns for the winter also usher in the danger season for winter dysentery of cattle, the Pennsylvania Veterinary Medical Association warned today.

The disease, often called winter scours, may effect both beef and dairy cattle during the months from November to March. It appears suddenly, usually with only one animal showing symptoms at the outset, but spreads quickly to other animals.

The fast-spreading nature of the disease makes it important for farmers to keep a close watch for symptoms so that a veterinarian can be called promptly to make a diagnosis and prescribe a treatment.

will be devoted to display of farm equipment at the 1962 exposition, the 46th in the series that started in 1917 in scattered sections of downtown Harrisburg.

Among the organizations who are renting space on the main floor at the coming Farm Show will be the five ities said that while winter dysentery may spread rapidly, the actual death rate is low. It does cause substantial economic loss, however, as the result of loss of weight, dehydration and a sharp drop in milk production.

Scours is the most prominent symptom of the disease. In severe cases, abdominal pain may be evidenced by twitching of the tail, kicking at the abdomen and lying down and getting up at frequent intervals.

Blackstrap molasses can be used to good advantage as a substitute for part of the grain in cattle rations.
