else on my ground, besides burley, that will make more." Smith raises 4½ acres of burley on his farm of over 300 acres

Another farmer, Thomas Smith, says he would rather have more burley tobacco, but since that is impossible the cigar filler tobacco takes up his extra labor and barn room and "makes a little money"

Farmers said they grew from 1,000 to 1,500 pounds per acre and received about 25 cents per pound for the cigar filler tobacco in comparison to the 65 to 68 cents per pound for burley.

Lancaster County farmers contacted by Lancaster Farming this week were up in arms over the statement that urban encroachment had caused tobacco acreage to dwindle. One long-time tobacco farmer said, "I have never believed in acreage controls, but if this is what we are up against, I don't see any other way out"

With the date of the referendum not yet set, several other farmers expressed similar feelings, but one grower expressed the belief that Lancaster County tobacco men would again turn down acreage controls in the hope of finding another solution to the problem
