As you plan flower arrangements don't try to copy what you've seen but rather let the materials you have decide what type of arrangement you will make. Be sure to consider the container as part of the complete arrangement you're planning. That's why it's usually best to use an inconspicuous container. But an ornate one with a single simple twig may be unusual. It's well to match the feeling of the flower with the texture of the container. Delicate glass takes fine, dainty flowers and pottery goes well with the forceful colors.

Even if you have to re-do it a few times it will still be an original when you're finished. Practice will give you more assurance that you've done something fresh and original.
