

DON'T COME A STEP CLOSER, this long horned mother seems to be telling that guy with the black box. The horns are not only long, but sharp as well, and the cow let it be known she would not hesitate to use them if anything threatened her calf. These are three head of Scotch highland cattle on exhibit this week at the Lancaster Stock Yards. On display also are a Brahman Bull and a Scotch Highland steer with a six-foot horn spread. L. F. I JUST WASHED MY HAIR AND I CAN'T DO A THING WITH IT. This five year old Scotch Highlander Steer has been on exhibition this week along with a 7 year old Brahman bull. The exhibits are part of the Stock Yards celebration of National Livestock Terminal Market month. The 1425 pound steer was consigned by Robert Simon and was placed on exhibit by Lester Beam and Elias Diller.

Itoring station is set up. These stations take samples from the air as well as from the coats of cattle shipped to the yard. Smith is also rural coordinator of the Civil Defense program in the county.

Speaking on behalf of the farmers in the group, Edward E. Rishel, York, said he markets all his cattle through the Lancaster yards because he feels the market is good on heavy cattle, but he buys most of his feeder cattle privately or at the organized beef-breeder calf sales in Virginia.

Rishel said he believed he could get higher quality feeder calves at the sales than on the yards.

He said his only "gripe" about the Stock yards concerned the cost of selling cattle through the commission man, but he said "I don't expect
