

SEVEN CORN PICKERS FLATTENED 65 acres of fodder and elevated 65 acres of grain into the wagons Tuesday at the Aaron Hostetter farm. Here four of them take an eight row swath in one path. On the pickers, front to rear are, Abram Kniesley, 3396 Marietta Ave., Lancaster; Melvin M. Kreider, Columbia R2; Ernest Lefever, Lancaster R2, and Ralph Gerlach, Lancaster R2. L. F. Photo.

NEIGHBORING WOMEN CAME to help prepare and serve the lunch for the 49 men who harvested the corn on the Aaron Hostetter farm. Twenty-six women brought food and helped serve it on the porch. L. F. Photo.

pickles, desserts, and steaming cups of coffee

After a member of the Old Order River Brethren Church, (the church to which the Hostetters belong) asked the blessing, the food began to disappear. The hearty lunch and the cups of hot coffee seemed to push back the chill of the windy October day, and joking and banter became the order of the day. It didn't last long, however, and by 12:30 the pickers began to roll again.

The pickers were furnished by Ralph Gerlach, Lancaster R2; Ernest Lefever, Lancaster R2; Elmer Rohrer, Lancaster R2, Abram Kniesley, 3396 Marietta Ave., Abram Charles, Lancaster R2, Melvin M Kreider, Columbia R2, and Raymond Leaman, Lancaster R2

By two O'clock, the last strip of corn fodder was flattened, and the last bushel of corn went up the elevators

One of the workers was heard to comment, "Well that's what neighbors are for, isn't it?"

Rho agricultural fraternity. He was for several years a member of the National Advisory Council on Rural Civil Defense.

Mr Stokes formerly served as a marketing research economist for the U. S. Department of Agriculture and is co-author of several publications on marketing practices. During the Korean conflict he assisted the Department in determining requirements of critical materials and facilities for the fats and oils industry.

Previous employment with the Michigan Farm Bureau Federation as a District Representative and with the Western Cottonseed Company as a livestock feed sales representative provided Mr Stokes with additional experience in association with farmers and related businessmen

According to Dean H. Keller of the Lancaster Chamber, The purpose of Business-Farm Day is two-fold

1 To offer factual information about business operations in an intelligent effort to provide our farmer guests a better understanding of the American Free Enterprise System. Evidence indicates that there are many misconceptions about the capital structure of business, the motives and procedures of management, the rates and character of profit and loss, the supply and function of capital and similar phases of the successful conduct of American business.

2 To promote a better understanding by farmers of how manufacturing, retail and wholesale distribution, service trades, banking and finance, etc. all have a place in our economic pattern and how all of these, in turn, serve and are served by agriculture.
