

DAIRY HEIFERS IN A NEWLY REMODELED barn have more room and eating space than they had in the smaller pens. Feeding is easier and cleaning out can be done with a tractor now that the old permanent partitions have been replaced with movable ones on the Elvin Hershey farm, Lincoln Highway, west of Lancaster. OLD FASHIONED COUNTRY BUTCHERING is almost a lost art in most of the nation. Here Elvin Hershey shows how he divides the hog carcass by cutting down each side of the backbone instead of splitting the backbone as most commercial butchers do. His market stand customers create a demand for more spare ribs and tenderloin strips rather than for pork chops, and Hershey knows the value of catering to customer wishes. L. F. Photo.
