Merged Co-op To Be Called Agway, Inc.

Agway, Inc., is the name selected for the huge farmer purchasing cooperative formed late last week as members of two farmer-owned businesses voted to merge operations.
Agway will assume the assets of the Cooperative Grange League Federation Inc. (GLF) and Eastern States Farmers' Exchange Inc. on July 1. Members of the two cooperatives approved the merger last week.
The name of the new organization, which will become what has been described as the largest farm-supply cooperative in the nation was announced by Edmund H. Fallo, general manager of GLF and the new cooperative.
GLF and Eastern do a combined annual business of more than $300 million in a combined total of 11 states.
GLF, based in Ithaca, operates in New York State, New Jersey and Northern Pennsylvania.

Eastern's territory takes in New England, Delaware and parts of Maryland, Ohio and Eastern Pennsylvania. Its headquarters are in West Springfield, Mass.

The site for Agway's headquarters has not yet been selected.

Moral Responsibility Takes Time

Parents need to realize that they can help their children develop responsibility. From early childhood, they can begin in small ways, then increase responsibility as the child grows older.

reasonable driving distance from a multi-million dollar plant, he said

Turning to corn production, he said he believes farmers are losing up to 50 per cent of the potential feed value of corn silage by cutting it too early.

He said a 100 bushel corn crop is worth only 100 bushels of feed value as sheeled corn. As corn and cob meal it is worth 113 bushels. As silage cut in the milk stage it is worth only 100 bushels, but if the corn is ensiled in the full dent stage, it is worth 151 bushels of feed value.

It takes three silos to hold the same value of milk stage silage as two silos of full dent corn silage, he said.
