 road freight rates, a "break-through" that would give Pennsylvania a better chance to compete with the southern states on livestock feed prices.
Insecticide Tests
 Bull said improved detection devices is making it harder all the time for farmers to meet pesticide tolerances. "Zero tolerance five years ago is not the same as zero today," he said, and called for a revamping of regulations to set a limit on the amount of pesticides allowable in food products. "If the same amount of the chemical is in foods today as five years ago, shouldn't it be called zero, or insignificant, or so forth?"

ways, building sites and etc. One of the best ways to accomplish these things, he said, is to work for more farm-oriented legislators. He said he looks for legislation soon regarding more stringent laws on open space and tax relief for farmers in industrial and other built up areas.

Bull was introduced by Lancaster County Agent, Max Smith.

● Dairy Show

The addition of the dairy event brings to three the number of state sponsored agricultural expositions.

The January state farm show was inaugurated 48 years ago and is open only to Pennsylvania exhibitors. Former Secretary of Agri-

He said by 1970, or 1975 at the latest, we can probably eliminate brucellosis from all species of livestock in the U.S., but tuberculosis is a different problem. It is very difficult to get the last few cases, he said.

Land Use Questioned

The secretary called for the formation of a watchdog committee for cases involving land taken under imminent domain.

He said, "If we are going to stay in the business of farming and keep the important food industry in Pennsylvania, we are going to have to do something about the large amount of class I land going into road-
