By Siring 1000 Pigs A Boar Can Pay For Himself

A good boar is well worth a price paid above that for an average herd sire, says Melvin Bradley, extension livestock specialist, Missouri Univ. Bradley states that a good boar, when he has sired a thousand pigs which are marketed, will pay for himself if . . .

—He increases feed efficiency of his offspring as much as five pounds per 100 pounds of gain, or —He increases sale price of market hogs 15 cents per 100 pounds, or —30 of his daughters are sold as breeding gifts for market price plus $10 a head.
