Corn growers are invited to bring freshly cut representative corn plants to the clinic where the agronomist will test them for nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium He will also interpret the results of the test and advise growers on any nutritional problems disclosed by the test

Growers are invited to bring a freshly cut corn plant from each of three areas they want tested The entire plant (with leaves attached) should be brought to the clinic There'll be no charge for testing three plants.

Tissue tests can indicate how well the fertilization program is meeting the needs of the corn crop Chemical tests have been developed which indicate the level of nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium in the tissue Using these tests, the agronomist can determine which, if any, nutrient is most limiting corn yields. By adjusting his fertilization program, based on the results of the tissue tests, a grower can provide a more balanced diet for his crop By providing nutrients that may be limiting yields, growers can realize greater yields and profits
