

FISHIN' BY ELECTRICITY. District fish warden Sam Hall, closest to the camera, and southeastern regional fish warden Harold Corbin, shown towing the plastic boat containing the generator, teamed with several other members of the Department to demonstrate how they use alternating current to immobilize the fish population and bring them to the surface for a head count. The fish found the demonstration shocking.

that temporarily stuns any fish in that area, causing them to float on top, or just under the surface of the water. Literally hundreds of fish were observed in this manner. Generally, the larger the fish the greater the effects of the "shocking" treatment, but even the largest sighted — a 14-inch Rainbow Trout — fully recovered in 10-15 minutes. The Fish Commission uses this method to study the growth potential of streams, and varieties of fish present.

Another contest feature of the Field Day was probably the highlight event of the day for the 15 youngsters who entered it. That was the "greased pig" scramble. The boys, all under 16 years of age, were given four minutes in which to capture a 50-pound shoat greased with lard and get it back to the truck waiting outside the enclosure. The pig survived the first wild rush and as he slithered out of the many-legged pile-up he attempted an end-run which never quite came off. He was stopped cold at the line of scrimmage by the diving tackle of 14-year-old Eugene Bollinger of Ephrata R2. Bollinger had the critter "hog-tied" and in the truck in less time than it took to tell the story — one and one-half minutes! Bollinger arranged to take the pig home to raise. The animal was donated to the event by Eby's Feed Mill, Lititz

An estimated crowd of about 250 people turned out for the affair this year, and seemed to enjoy the contests, wagon tours, and demonstrations.

● Ag. Grads

Agriculture graduates have gone into agricultural industries, with State and Federal agencies close behind. The armed forces claimed the next largest group followed by farm operations. At the time of the survey, about two weeks before graduation, another group with "uncertain plans" completed the list.

Of those students enrolling for graduate work at Penn State, the greatest number are studying agricultural education, forest technology, and dairy production. The next largest number are pursuing graduate degrees in agricultural business, agronomy, dairy technology, forestry science, horticulture, general agriculture, and animal industry.

Dr. Pasto also calls attention to positions taken by June graduates of the two-year-old associate degree program in forest technology located at the Mont Alto Campus. Of 14 graduates, 11 are employed in forest industries and 3 are employed in government or university forestry work.

An increase is reported in the number of firms or agencies interviewing students on the campus, reflecting an increasing demand for agricultural graduates.
