County Libraries Get $56,000 In State Aid

Lancaster County public libraries recently received state aid in the amount of $56,282, it was announced this week by Governor Scranton's office.

Five libraries in the county were among a total of 290 in Pennsylvania to share more than $27 million in such state aid. This amounted to a dispersal of 15 cents per capita, up from last year's 12.5 cents figure. Governor Scranton has recommended that this amount be increased next year to 25 cents per capita.

Lancaster City library received the lion's share of the county's total, $49,754, Christiana, $257, Columbia, $4,624, Ephrata, $1,153, and Mount Joy, $494.

"The resource centers, and 29 district library centers located in major marketing areas, provide special services on which all Pennsylvania citizens may draw, even if the patron's local library is not currently participating in the state aid program."

Since the program was first instituted in 1962, aid per capita has risen from 5.9 cents to the current 15-cent level. The Library Code, enabling legislation for the program, allows up to 25 cents per capita to be paid. In 1962, 55 percent of all existing public library facilities participated in the aid program. Today, 290 of the existing 467 libraries, or 62 percent, now qualify for assistance.

Of the $26 million disbursed in 1965 approximately 40 percent was used for increased staff costs, 39 percent for books, magazines and other library materials, 14 percent for equipment, supplies and other operating expenses, and 7 percent for capital expenditures, the State Library reported.
