Society Of Farm Women Convene ● Poultry Assn.

HARRISBURG — About 500 women attended the opening session of the 48th annual convention of the Society of Farm Women of Pennsylvania, held at the 51st State Fair Show. Mrs. Elmo L. Mentzer, Cumberland County, president of the State organization, presided at both the morning and afternoon sessions in the Forum of the Education Building.

State Secretary of Agriculture, Leland H. Bull, welcomed the group and reviewed the proposed plans for new facilities of the show's physical set-up in the years ahead.

Berks County was in charge of the memorial service for 39 members who died during the past year. Rev. John E. Winter, professor of philosophy at Millersville State College, was guest speaker in the afternoon. His topic was "Humor's Place in the Examined Life." He said that humor is as important as any other element in life and that true humor is warm, friendly, honest, human and positive.

Rev. Winter told the delegates, "laughter is a purposeful change of pace and that only man can laugh. Humor is the only thing that will hold in the taut moments."

Lois McCune, York County, provided special music.

The Society held its banquet Monday at the Scottish Rite Cathedral in Harrisburg with Mrs. W. F. Dummer, York County, first vice president, presiding.

The State Society now has 164 groups in 18 counties with 3,800 members.

FULTON GRANGE REPORTS PLANS AND ACTIVITIES

Clifford W. Holloway, Jr., Master, conducted the business meeting of Fulton Grange January 9 at Oakryn. It was announced that reservations for Lancaster County Pomona Grange dinner meeting January 21 at 7 p.m. at the Rhoads Spanish Restaurant are to be given to Thomas Galbreath by January 16.

The Home Economics Committee served a Christmas dinner to the Friendly Farmers Club January 4.

The Membership Committee of which Clair Murphy is chairman is conducting an active campaign with the membership divided into two teams, the "Corn Huskers" and the "Pea Pickers", the latter being in the lead at present.

The Youth Committee reported that the scrap drive for the benefit of Scout Troop 330 netted $33.17 which will be used for camp equipment, another drive for paper will be conducted in March or April.

Miss Agnes Spence, Lecturer, was in charge of a delayed Christmas gift exchange. Richard Nye, a member of the U.S. Navy, showed colored slides of ports in the Mediterranean Sea and various other ports around the world, also, many ships and methods of refueling and transferring passengers from one ship to another. J. Robert Reed played a violin solo and was accompanied by Mrs. Richard Jackson.

The next meeting will be held January 23.

According to British records, the Mayflower was valued at $750 in 1624, when it brought the Pilgrims across the Atlantic.

held for January 24, and will feature a panel discussing the general theme of "Preserving Your Right To Farm".

Lancaster County Planning Director Ellis Harned will lead off the four man panel by describing the basics of local zoning as they affect farmers. A State Health Department sanitary engineer, John P. Durr, will review some of the fly, odor, and water pollution problems that have faced farmers in many built-up areas. A well-known Bucks County poultryman, C. M. Buchman, will describe some of the things he has learned about getting along with his neighbors in an area of increasing population; and Penn State rural affairs specialist William Carroll will relate what other farmers in the state have done to preserve their right to farm.

All three meetings will be held at the Lititz Recreation Center, one block west of the Square in Lititz, Esbenshade said, adding that the meeting room will comfortably seat about 250 people. Meetings will all begin at 7:45 p.m.

The second meeting is set for February 7, and will "Take A New Look At Egg Marketing". Discussion will range from egg quality to new products.

R. W. Sauder, Lititz, will tell poultrymen what an egg dealer looks for in quality, and what farmers can do to upgrade their egg quality. Arthur Lehman, Victor F. Weaver, Inc., New Holland, will describe some of the opportunities for poultrymen to serve the egg breaking market. K. M. Souders, general manager Producers' Co-Op, Coatesville, will discuss the progress of "Central Marketing Agencies and their effect on egg producers." Earl Hess, Hess Bios Farms, Inc., Ephrata, will tell poultrymen about developments and markets for new egg products, and about outside competition.

The final meeting of the series will be held on February 28, and will take a look at the local aspects of financing.

Elwood Willard, Spread Eagle Farm, Klingstown, will discuss the future of the poultry industry, as he sees it.

George Lewis, agricultural representative of the Conestoga National Bank, and Carl Brown, manager of the Lancaster Farm Credit Office will each discuss "Poultry Financing" from the viewpoint of their respective lending agencies.

Dr. Floyd Hicks, extension poultry specialist from Penn State University, will talk about modern record keeping systems as related to financing.
