CARCASS QUALITY IMPROVING

Henkel stated that since the association has been sponsoring the spring and fall carcass shows, "there has been a steady improvement in carcass quality of entries." For example, Henkel noted, when the shows started three years ago, any hog cutting 40 percent was almost certain to be a winner. In this week's show more than one-third of the entries cut over 40 percent ham and loin.

OTHER PLACINGS

The next three placings in the carcass show, following the champion and reserve champion, were:

3—Elwood Houser, Lebanon R3, a Yorkshire, 13 inches backfat, 45 square inch loin-eye, and a ham-loin percentage of 41.5.

4—Masonic Homes Farm, Elizabethtown, a Duroc, 12 inches backfat, 46 square inch loin-eye, and a 41.5 ham-loin percentage.

5—George Cogley, Ronks R1, a Yorkshire, 13 inches backfat, 44 square inches loin-eye, and 41.4 ham-loin percentage.

Carcass analysis was supervised and calculated by livestock extension specialist Dwight Younkin, of Penn State University. The animals were cut up Wednesday at Kunzler & Co., Inc., Lancaster.

"TERRIFIC HAMS," was the way Penn State extension livestock specialist Dwight Younkin described this Hampshire-Yorkshire crossbred hog following the on-foot evaluation contest at the Lancaster Stock Yard Monday. When the 26 entries were cut up Wednesday, and their respective carcasses measured for dressed yield, this animal was selected grand champion of the Lancaster County Swine Producers Association's Spring Carcass Show. The crossbred was entered by Real Farm of Tipton, Pa.

Featured speaker Roland Paul, executive vice president of the National Pork Producers Council, Des Moines, Iowa, told the swine producers about the Council's program for promotion and research.
