needs for tomato, potato, tobacco, and apple crops. Daily round-trip transportation is provided to farm job sites by farmers, by labor contractors who serve as crew leaders, or by private car pools, Kelly notes.

Last year, the local manager reports, some 500 workers participated in 25 day-haul programs in the Lancaster County area.

ministrators simply can't cope with.

"I am not suggesting that the rioters are displaced farm people," Dechant said.

"I am saying that mass migrations from the farm have greatly overtaxed the facilities and resources of the cities, which for years have fallen short of meeting the needs of people."

Although there is a crisis in the cities now, the farm leader said, it will get even worse if big non-farm corporations are successful in their move to take over agriculture. This, he said, will push hundreds of thousands more off the land every year.

The fact that big metropolitan newspapers have been publishing stories about both city riots and corporation farming this summer is significant, he said, because the stories deal with the same basic problem.

"Both reflect the unsettling symptoms of the most serious domestic problem of our time—the steady decay of the economic and social fabric of rural America," he said.

"This problem is both neglected and widely misunderstood."

Dechant said he has difficulty understanding why big city mayors and urban-oriented organizations ignore rural problems when they try to find out why more ghettos erupt into violence every summer.

"All we get from big city spokesmen, and from most politicians, are demands for more billions to pay for badly-needed housing, schools and jobs in the cities," he said.

"These demands for billion-dollar cures—which we support, by the way—get widespread public attention while much more modest proposals for rural America are virtually ignored."

He contended the rebellion in the cities has its roots in the long-time neglect of rural communities and of the farm economy.

"Too few people realize that a little patent medicine applied in the country the past few years would have prevented the need for most of this major surgery in the cities," he said. "And too few realize that there's still time to apply some of these simple remedies in rural areas now."

Dechant said the refugees from rural America—including such people as dairy farmers who quit because of low

New Horse Parasite Film Distributed

"Parasites in Horses," a new 16mm film sponsored by The Upjohn Company, was produced to acquaint the horse owner with the serious nature and prices, small town businessmen who have to leave because their farm customers have left, and seasonal workers who want steady year-around jobs—add to the pressure for city jobs.

This, he said, diminishes job opportunities for the uneducated and unskilled, leaving them under-employed or unemployed and pushing them into slums and onto the welfare rolls.

extent of internal parasite problems in horses. Essential information about the life cycles of parasites, the injury they cause, and the prevention and cure of parasitic infections is presented.

The film is being distributed on a free-loan basis by Sterling Movies, Inc., 43 West 61st Street, New York City. It runs 25 minutes, with sound and color.
