its relations. "We need to try to keep problems out of the newspapers," he said.

If your manure spreader is taken on the public highway be sure the spreader does not leak and that it is covered. "We have a public image-building job to do," he said.

Also, if you do get into a problem where you would need to go to court, get a lawyer who is favorable to agriculture and one who knows something about it. Most cases of this type have gone in favor of agriculture," he said. "But if one goes the other way it will be used as an example for future cases."

Average August Prices Decline Three Percent

Declining prices for grains, hay, vegetables, meat animals and poultry more than offset increasing fruit and milk prices, allowing the August index of prices received by farmers to drop 3 percent, according to the Pennsylvania Crop Reporting Service. Primarily responsible for the decline were lower vegetable prices — a result of excellent growing conditions and bumper crops.

The index of prices received NEPPCO tour coming into the county on October 9; discussed plans for joint meetings with neighboring counties and sought ideas to increase membership. John Hess, president, was in the charge of the meeting.

for livestock and livestock products was unchanged from the previous month, as meat animal prices dropped and milk prices gained. Accounting for from the previous month. The were hogs, at $21.40 per cwt., and slaughter cows, at $17.80 per cwt., both 80 cents less than the previous month. Lambs were off half a dollar at $23.50 and sheep, at $7.20, were down 20 cents. Calves showed the only gain, up 20 cents to $32.80. Steers and heifers, at $24.80, were unchanged from the previous month.

Grain and hay prices were all lower, with the exception of barley, which was unchanged the drop in meat animal prices biggest drop was for corn which, at $1.41, was down 8 cents from the previous month and a dime below a year ago. Oats, at 77 cents per bushel, was 7 cents below the previous month, as was soybeans at $2.57. Wheat fell 3 cents, and at $1.30 was 37 cents per bushel below a year ago.

The index of poultry and egg prices dropped 3 percent as a result of a cent decline in all chicken prices. Egg prices, unchanged from the previous month, were at 33 cents per dozen — 11 cents below a year ago.

Global Food Shortage Key Is Research

The anticipated world food shortage can be avoided, according to the dean of the College of Agricultural Sciences at the University of Delaware. Dr. William E. McDaniel told a field day audience recently that the consuming public's interest in low food prices will be the key to a solution. "They will invest in agricultural research and extension to hold down the price of food." The result will be improved technology, higher productivity and greater world food output, he adds.

He pointed out that non-farm people reap the greatest return from investments in agricultural research and extension. They have benefited even more than the farmers themselves, he said, because as farmers adopt the findings of research, more food is produced and relatively lower prices result. Consumers thus receive dividends on their initial investments, the agricultural expert stated.

In explaining the role of the University's substation to approximately 1000 farmers, agribusinessmen, civic leaders and homemakers, McDaniel said that the more than 80 research projects being undertaken are designed to improve the efficiency of food production through increased yields per acre and per animal unit. As soon as an improved variety or technique is developed, it is passed along to those who can put it to work.

McDaniel said there has been a general concern for the future of agricultural research because of reapportioned state legislatures and decreasing representation from rural areas in Congress. "This has affected and will continue to affect appropriations for agricultural research. The effect, however, has been and will continue to be favorable." He said non-farm interest in low-priced food makes this so.
