4-H Club Work Provides Learning Opportunities

Two and a quarter million Americans can't be wrong. Members of 4-H Clubs all over the United States are demonstrating this during National 4-H Week, Sept. 30-Oct. 7.

The 4-H program is providing learning opportunities to help tomorrow's adults prepare for economic, social, and learning responsibilities, says Leland G. Jinks, State 4-H Club leader at The Pennsylvania State University.

In Pennsylvania, over 500,000 different boys and girls have taken part in 4-H work since 1914, when the Smith-Lever Act authorized the Cooperative Extension Service and federal legislation first helped finance and conduct 4-H work.

Figures show 4-H now extends far beyond rural areas, the State 4-H leader points out. Forty-six percent of the members come from farm homes, 32 percent from rural non-farm homes, and 22 percent from urban areas. All races and creeds, and families from all economic backgrounds are represented.

Projects are now geared to meet the needs of both urban and rural youth alike. They are educational and vary from home improvement and personal development to civic and community service.

Popular 4-H projects in which today's youth participate include plan and plant for beauty, animal science, health and nutrition, clothing, per-
