PSU Specialist Gives Dairy Cow Breeding Rules

Harvey Shaffer, dairy extension specialist from Penn State, told 45 farmers gathered at the Spanish Restaurant in Quarryville Thursday evening, that many dairymen have been breeding their cows too early in the heat period.

"The most important single thing in breeding the cow is timing," he said. "All you need to worry about is to get the live egg and the healthy sperm together. To do this we need to breed the cows later than many of us have been."

Shaffer suggested the best time is from middle to end of standing heat and as much as six hours after. "Don't be afraid of late breeding," he said. "You can't fertilize the egg before it is produced."
