cludes a paint room and shop foreman's office. Don Gerhart (center) is general manager, Gene Strayer, parts manager, Alvin Crouse, service manager and Dean F. Miller, owner. Ample parking and covered storage adjoin the outside of the main building.

William Leamy, extension dairyman at the University of Vermont:

Keep individual production records such as DHIR; DHIA; or owner sampler.

Choose your herd sires from among plus-predicted-difference bulls with high repeatability values.

Breed 15% to 25% of your herd to young bulls under progeny test.

Rank your cows for production using the herdmate comparison list.

Remove the bottom 10% to 15% of the herd each year. Cull on production. Any cow that averages 1,500 to 2,000 pounds of milk below herdmates is a candidate for culling.

Raise all the healthy heifer calves for replacement that labor and facilities will permit.

Remove your poorest producer when you have a better heifer to take her place.

If you must choose between a fair older cow and an average heifer — save the younger animal.

Do a good job of herd management to prevent undue losses of good cows.

Give every cow an equal chance; challenge her genetic ability by giving her all she'll eat and measure her response.

Snowmobiles Illegal On Game Lands

Hunters are reminded that it is illegal to drive snowmobiles on State Game Lands, except on roads open to public travel, during the upcoming bear and deer seasons.

With interest in snowmobiles mushrooming and sales soaring, some outdoorsmen may have entertained the thought that this would be a means of crossing State Game Lands in big game seasons.

They are advised that to do so is unlawful.
