BEEF HERD MAIL COURSE OFFERED

A beef herd care and management course is now offered by mail from The Pennsylvania State University. It's for farmers keeping small herds of cattle and intentionally dividing their time between grain and forage crop production as well as livestock care. For them beef cattle offer some advantages over other kinds of animals.

Corn stover, coarse hay and rank pastures are more useful to beebes than to other livestock.

Labor needs in summer are light for cattle, allowing work on crop care.

Home-grown grains and forages are suited to cattle.

Cattle can pasture low and wet or rough and hilly land better than other animals.

For a discussion of beef cattle production problems study the Penn State correspondence course. Send your name and address with $4.65 to Beef Production, Box 5000, University Park, Pa. 16802. There are no other charges and a complete course copy comes to you by mail.

countries, Brown said "It is difficult to give away farm products to people living at the subsistence level much less sell them anything. Only as they enter the marketplace and develop some purchasing power can they be expected to buy our products."

He cited several countries, including Japan, Taiwan, Israel, South Korea and Pakistan, whose purchase of U. S. farm goods have tripled in the past eight years, even while their food output has continued to rise sharply. U. S. farm exports for dollars have climbed 80 percent over the past decade, largely because of the rising levels of prosperity in scores of countries around the world.

But, he saw the alarming population growth of many countries as an almost insurmountable problem, which even the agricultural revolution will not solve.

"The current agricultural breakthroughs will only buy time with which to achieve some technical breakthroughs in population control. Still ahead, he said, even if the food problem is solved, is the need to create jobs.

"By 1980, the food-population problems will more likely be re-
