'Pfew' Pollution has power! Political power'

The Democrats and Republicans are said to be in a heated contest to claim credit for cleaning up the mess that both sides have eagerly taken credit for creating during the past decades in the name of progress

Don Muhm, Des Moines Register and Tribune farm editor and president of the Newspaper Farm Editors of America, told agriculture editors Feb 29 at Columbia, Mo., the major political issue in Iowa is pollution

President Richard Nixon has proposed a $4 billion pollution control program. He has appointed a new 3 member Quality Control Council headed by Russell E. Train, a noted conservationist and Under-secretary of Interior.

In other Washington releases, proposals have been made to cut ACP (Agriculture Conservation Program) funds. These are government matching funds to assist farmers and ranchers in performing conservation practices

Some ranchers said they applied for matching funds to construct ponds but learned ACP funds for such conservation work were exhausted

Some arguments state the

ACP funds are forms of farm subsidies which increase productivity of the land; therefore, the ranchers and farmers should pay for them.

Some ranchers ask if the $4 billion allocated for city sewerage treatment plants isn't a subsidy to urban residents. Conservationists point out that 90 per cent of anti-pollution projects will be on the land

Some ask if there will not be duplication, with pollution moneys being spent for desk work, adding more paper to the pollution pack. Others say the more who get concerned with the problem, the better.

The Nixon administration has asked $327 million for the Land and Water Conservation fund.

The spotlight is focused on pollution. Action is certain, conservationists feel. Will too many agencies flounder in a fog of confusion or will organized efforts be exerted toward the goal of cleaning up the environment now?
