Penn State Poultry Tour Termed Highly Successful

The Lancaster County Poultry Association trip to Penn State this week was very successful, according to Jay Irwin, associate county agent.

Some 33 producers, equipment manufacturers and feed suppliers made the bus trip — not a many as had been hoped but several other local activities probably kept the numbers down some, it was indicated.

But Irwin said the interest of those who went was excellent. The program included:

Dr. Glenn Bressler's sloping wire floor and automatic manure drying and cleaning system also his research on different types of floors for breeding flocks in an effort to cut down on dust, bacteria on eggs and bird foot problems.

At the disease lab, Dr. Robert F. Gentry discussed his work on Marek's vaccine which shows the vaccine is effective in controlling Marek's. A tour of the animal science building to see the work of Dr. Edward Buss on genetics.

The product development research of Dr. Joe McNeil on poultry processing to obtain new products. This work includes putting poultry meat in o hot dogs.

In the afternoon the group split up, giving each person an opportunity to return to one of the above areas of interest for further information.

Dr. Kenneth Goodwin, head of the poultry science department, organized and conducted the tour with the assistance of Dr. Floyd Hicks and Prof. Herbert Jordan, extension poultry specialists.

Conservation Officials Bid Farewell at Party

Two Southeastern Pennsylvania soil conservation officials who returned recently were honored Wednesday night at a farewell party at Hillcrest Supper Club at Elizabethtown.

They were, Robert (Al) Young, district conservationist for York County, and W. Merrill Kunkle, soil scientist for the Lebanon County district.

Each had served in seven states during his career. Young was in conservation work for 36 years and Kunkle for 35 years.
