Herbert Jordan, Penn State poultry specialist, continued by stating that people today are being advised of the need to increase their protein consumption and decrease carbohydrates and snacks

"We're excited about this trend because eggs are one of the best and cheapest sources of protein," he said.

Jordan used the comments as an introduction to his main topic, an explanation of eggs as a means of fighting hypoglycemia which Jordan described as low blood pressure. One to five eggs a day are recommended by nutritional authorities to combat this condition, he said (See separate story for details.)

Jordan also demonstrated how to distinguish a cooked from an uncooked egg. Simply spin them. The uncooked egg won't spin readily, while the cooked egg will spin easily.

Pennsylvania's secretary of agriculture, Leland H. Bull, said the state inspection program is important to the egg industry because it insures the quality which helps make the consumer interested in buying eggs time after time.

Bull also said product research is important to help find new ways to sell agricultural products in new forms.

But the real attraction of the evening at the Hilton was Stanish himself.

Using three skillets, the omelet king stirred his omelet mix into each one in turn, skillfully stirring the mixture till it was nearly done, quickly sprinkling some cheese, then rolling the omelet to one end of the skillet. This was repeated with the other two skillets, then each was unloaded onto waiting plates.

Many VIP's, including Pennsylvania Secretary of Agriculture, Leland H. Bull, (lower left) attended the omelet promotion at the Hilton. Admiring the omelet with Secretary Bull are: Miss Nanette Stauffer, Lancaster County Poultry Queen, who will be competing for the state title today (Saturday); Sherman Hill, Pennsylvania House of Representatives, house agricultural committee, and Clarence Manbeck, Pennsylvania Senate, vice chairman of the senate agricultural committee. Lancaster Mayor Thomas J. Monaghan (not shown) presented the key to the city to Stanish.

The guests, including many women, admired the ease with which he did it at the rate of one every 20 seconds when he was at peak performance, but he seemed to wear down a little after the first few dozen diners went through the line.

Also, it was observed that he seemed to go faster when the Heidelberg Polka Band had a fast number going.

Two small fries, which tempo-arily upstaged the egg, didn't deter him.

Stanish received a plaque from the Pennsylvania Poultry Federation for his work in promoting the egg. It was reported that he prepares 20,000 to 30,000 omelets a year, using up to 300 different recipes and 150 different ingredients.

Stanish was at the Dutch Days celebration in Hershey later in the week, where he used 150 dozen fresh eggs in making his specialty.
