Some Farmers Can File For Wheat Pool Funds

Some Lancaster County farmers are eligible for reimbursements under the Food and Agriculture Act of 1965 if they are enrolled in the federal wheat program for 1968, according to Dorothy Y. Neel, head of the local ASCS office.

The act provided for issuance of export certificate payments to farmers in any year that the total value of wheat export certificates collected exceeded the value of export subsidies paid.

In 1968, for the first time since 1965, the world market price of wheat was at times higher than the US market price, and an export certificate pool of about $42 million was collected.

All farmers enrolled in the 1968 wheat program are eligible for a proportionate share of the pool.

Farmers who don't wish to support this effort to expand wheat markets may file written request for their share of the export certificate pool. If no request is made, the money is automatically retained to finance the wheat research and market promotion programs through the National Wheat Institute.

With Help, Australian Mayor Meets Promise

Political office seekers up for election this November might take note of how it's done in Australia.

When elected three years ago, the Lord Mayor of Brisbane, Australia, campaigned with the promise that he would rid the city of "mossies", the down-under name for mosquitoes.

This year he was required to make good on the promise because an extremely mild winter stimulated the breeding of mosquitoes from larvae in some 9,000 acres of tidal pools and mangrove swamps near Brisbane.

Thanks to enviable good timing the Lord Mayor was equal to the crisis. Scientists and students at the University of Queensland had just completed a study of mosquito breeding habits. The two-year research project was supported by a grant from Chevron Chemical Company of San Francisco.

Brisbane townspeople were invited to witness the application of a mild pesticide called Dibrom. The chemical, which was applied in small but highly effective doses, killed 90 percent of the malicious pests. Conservationists approved the abatement application because the Dibrom quickly broke down into harmless compounds without harming human or animal life.

Control of the mosquitoes appears to assure reelection of the Lord Mayor should he run again. It's near impossible to
