The theme of the program was "Thanksgiving and Harvest" Irwin spoke to the group on "Agriculture In The Seventies" He said that "one of the most important areas is business management. Farmers are going to use computers to make decisions and to keep records because time will be too valuable to do it otherwise. There will be fewer farms but farms will be larger.

"He projected that by 1980 half of our dairy farms now in existence will be gone but there will be more milk because cows will produce more. The same is true for other farm enterprises.

The income from poultry in Lancaster County last year surpassed income from the dairy business. There is now one poultry farm in our county that keeps 360,000 layers and one man takes care of 45,000 layers.

He quoted statistics on the number of dairy cows, beef cattle, swine and poultry raised in the county. Of the 423,000 acres under cultivation in our county 150,000 acres is planted in corn.

Of the problems facing farmers, pollution is the most immediate one. Research continues to solve many disease problems among poultry and farm animals. He also predicted that farm machinery would increase in size as our farms will and that we are going to have safety minded people with all this machinery.
