How To Care For Suede Garments

If you are fortunate enough to own a suede garment or one trimmed in suede, you will want to give it special care to keep it looking attractive. Suede is a finish given to leather by abrasion. The process makes the leather soft and pliable and gives it a velvety surface called a nap. Garment labels often give cleaning instructions. And they may state that the suede is guaranteed, provided it's cleaned by a certain process. That's why you want to be sure to check labels and hangtags.

Suede usually needs to be cleaned by specialists in leather care since it may also need to be reconditioned and redyed after cleaning. Although such care is expensive, home-cleaning may prove more expensive. Some cleaning fluids may remove the dye. The added expense of correcting the damage may amount to more than the professional cleaning would have cost.

Here are several home care suggestions for suede. You can remove general soil by brushing suede with a soft bristle brush or a damp rubber sponge. Use a circular motion to collect surface soil and oil. And, a gum will remove some surface soil.

Hang a suede garment on a padded hanger in a cool closet. Don't cover suede with a plastic bag because heat and lack of circulation dries out leather. You can press a suede garment with a warm, dry iron. Press wrong-side out, using brown wrapping paper between the iron and leather.

Remember, never use steam. And don't try to wash suede with water. And should you get caught in the rain or snow in your suede coat, let it dry naturally at room temperature. Use a dry cellulose sponge to help restore the nap when the garment is dry. Proper care of your suede or suede-trimmed garment can keep it looking as attractive as the first day you wore it.

How To Buy Quality Luggage

Americans are always on the move. And when they are, they usually have a suitcase in their hand. If you're buying luggage for an upcoming vacation here are some tips for choosing the best quality for your money.

First of all, buy luggage that's lightweight and compact, yet strong and roomy. Lightweight but strong luggage makes even the largest piece easy to carry. If a suitcase is heavy or hard to manage when it's empty, think what it will be like when it's packed.

Also, check the outside construction and the inside trimmings and linings for quality workmanship. The outer material of luggage should be tough and highly resistant to scuffing, scratching, and staining. Many outer materials are waterproof and washable. Others are treated with a special finish to repel dust and stains.

Fine quality hardware — hinges, locks, and zippers — are another sign of quality in luggage. Look for locks that work easily but won't snap open accidentally. To be sure locks are smooth, run your finger along the slides and across the top.

Look for a comfortable handle, too — one that's securely attached and positioned for easy carrying, yet comfortable in your hand. Handles may be fashioned of molded plastic, leather, vinyl, or metal, cushioned with vinyl-coated foam rubber.

Finally, take the time to read hangtags for information on materials and finishes used. Well-made luggage may have a high price tag, but you can expect it to give you top service for a long time.
