Tangier 'Island; conducted a county queen contest culminating in the selection of Miss Linda Kaye Hess, who was present at the banquet; distributed 111,000 place mats promoting eggs to restaurants throughout Lancaster County, and increased membership by 60 members.

Homer Bicksler, executive director of the Pennsylvania Poultry Federation, spoke briefly, praising the work of the Lancaster Association as by far the best of any poultry association in the state; he added that good work is expected, however, since the county group represents 20 per cent of poultry production in the state.

Bicksler also noted that bills are being considered both in Washington and Harrisburg to develop some type of farm bargaining system. While the present indication is that neither of the present will be adopted in their present form, some type of bargaining legislation is expected "sooner or later."

On the cholesterol issue. Bicksler said representatives of some of the leading egg sales firms informed him that sales have dropped 10 per cent following adverse publicity on cholesterol. He reported that the PENB is conducting a fund raising drive to counteract the adverse publicity; the Pennsylvania Poultry Federation contributed $1,500 and the
