Read Polyester Labels For Care Instructions

Most double knits made of polyester are washable. But don't take this fact for granted, warns Mrs. Ruth Ann Wilson, Penn State University Extension clothing specialist.

Before buying a garment made of polyester, read the hang tag or label for recommended care instructions. You may find a variety of cleaning methods listed.

Before tossing everything into the automatic washer and dryer, consider the type of garment and the degree of soil. Garments such as children's clothes, men's slacks, shirts, and women's dress, with an average amount of soil, can be washed successfully at home in the washer on the delicate or wash-and-wear setting, or at the coin operated laundries in washers and dryers programmed for polyester double knits.

For those expensive garments with high fashion details, dry cleaning may be a better cleaning method, says Mrs. Wilson. Oily soil, such as make-up and grease stains also suggest that the garment should be dry cleaned.

Take time to read labels for recommended care instructions and to evaluate each garment for the amount of soil. Then decide on the proper cleaning method which can prolong the life of the garment.

Fall is the season for brilliantly colored leaves.

Here in Pennsylvania we have 123 species of trees.

My favorite one is the Blackgum. We had a large tree of this variety in the middle of a field, but it was cut down the same as a Black Walnut because they grew at the wrong place.

There is a huge White Mulberry shading our summer house and it has a circumference of over 12 feet.

We've been enjoying quinces which my parents brought from Berks County I'm told that 100 years ago most people had a quince tree in the yard, but now seldom do I see one.

We do have a Persimmon tree which bears some fruit and I enjoy hunting them among the dead leaves after frost I've just been counting and there are 15 different kinds of trees in our yard and garden.

Halloween season is a time to remember the fun we had as children roaming the little village of Oregon. It seems as though the householders who were the grouchiest and threatened us with "boiling water" were the very ones that had their shutters removed and their windows soaped.

Oh, to go screaming down the dark roads and stumbling in the ditches again.

A few years ago my sons dressed as a Holstein cow at a party and were an instant sensation. After standing awhile, they lay down only to have the problem of remembering which "end" gets up first. The other children tried to play veterinarian and give an injection to help them up. Even I had fun sewing those odd-shaped black patches on a white sheet.

My window sills are now bulging with houseplants from my garden and the flower beds of a kind cottager on our farm.

I greatly enjoy the blooming begonia and impatiens plants during the winter months. Each new bud is a constant reminder the Spring is coming.

Make Baby Clothes Comfortable

If you're expecting a new baby, keep in mind that he'll need few garments and accessories. But he does need clothes that are easy to launder, lightweight, and absorbent.

Whether your baby is asleep or awake, see that he's comfortable, reminds Mrs. Ruth Ann Wilson, Pennsylvania State University Extension clothing specialist.

His clothing, something to wear or a blanket, must be safe, too. Garments with neckline drawstrings can be dangerous.

You'll want to see that every garment allows enough freedom of movement.

Flat seams and easy-to-use fasteners are other features that you'll want in your baby's clothes. Fancy trimmings may be pretty, but they can hinder baby's movements or make him uncomfortable.

Garments that are easy to put on and take off belong in a baby's wardrobe, according to Mrs. Wilson. This means plenty of room at neck openings. Your baby can be frightened when you pull a tight garment over his head. Garments that open flat rather than slide over the head are a wise choice.

Another important feature to look for when buying baby clothes is washability. Mrs. Wilson says you'll want to launder baby's clothes after each use. Remember that absorbent fabrics will keep him more comfortable. And softness of fabrics is essential for his tender skin.

When selecting baby's first wardrobe, be sure you get soft, absorbent garments that are washable and easy to put on.

Although he'll need few clothes, Mrs. Wilson reminds you that he'll need clothes that will keep him comfortable 24 hours a day.
