USDA Reports Study of Feed Firms

Nearly 98 per cent of the 96 million tons of formula feeds produced in the United States in 1969 came from firms processing at least 1,000 tons annually, according to a report issued recently by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

About four-fifths of the total came from firms putting out more than 10,000 tons a year. Almost 30 per cent was produced by firms processing over 100,000 tons annually.

USDA's Economic Research Service questioned over 12,000 firms to gain information on output, production capacity, ownership, and disposition of feed. Firms processing less than 1,000 tons were not surveyed in detail.

About one-third of the firms with tonnages of 1,000-plus were primarily feed manufacturers, while the rest derived their major income from sales of farm supplies, grain marketing, cattle and hog feeding, or grain storage

Corporations produced some two-thirds of the formula feed total; farmer cooperatives 20 per cent; and partnerships, single owners, and others the remaining 15 per cent, according to the report.

In the Lake States, farmer cooperatives' output equaled the corporations' total, although elsewhere the corporations turned out at least two million tons more than the other kinds of firms. In the Southern Plains and Mountain regions, partnerships and single owner firms had twice the output of the farmer cooperatives, the report shows.

Of the 96 million tons of formula feed produced in 1969, 61 million were primary (single feed) ingredients; 28 million were secondary (at least one processed or mixed ingredient). The rest of the formula feed was produced by firms not designating primary or secondary ingredients.

'Prudent Diet' PENB Hits

"The so-called 'prudent diet' proposed by the American Heart Association, aimed at improving everyone's chances of not having a heart attack, presents the American Consumer with quite a quandry. It increases the food budget by 10 per cent according to a USDA study," challenged Mal Cleland, chairman of PENB

The study appeared in the July issue of Agricultural Economics Research and was entitled, "Potential Effects of Fat-Controlled, Low-Cholesterol Diet on U.S. Food Consumption." The authors are Le Bovit and Gale.

Not only would food costs rise by 10 per cent, while calorie intake was being lowered by 13 per cent, but total food intake in pounds would increase since lean beef, poultry, fish, fruits and vegetables would partly replace lower priced but more concentrated foods such as eggs, pork, fats and sugars.

According to the study, about the only factor the medical profession can agree on completely in the diet-heart controversy is that ideal body weight should be maintained throughout life.

The researchers considered the recommendations of the Report of Inter-Society Commission for Heart Disease Resources, such as were outlined recently in Reader's Digest. They related these to USDA studies based on the Household Food Consumption Surveys of 1955 and 1965.

They point out that the "prudent diet" would make almost no change in the total amount of meat, poultry and fish, and almost no change in total dairy products (excepting butter). It would require a little less grain and reduce sugar consumption by 50 per cent.

The diet would, however, increase consumption as follows:
—10 per cent beef, veal and lamb
—50 per cent more poultry and fish

—60 per cent more salad and cooking oil
—75 per cent more fruits and vegetables
The dietary decreases would include:

—72 per cent less eggs
—88 per cent less bacon and lard
—61 per cent less other pork
—78 per cent less margarine and shortening
—57 per cent less high fat baked goods.

Le Bovit and Gale comment that such drastic changes in consumption as presented are unlikely to occur soon for the general population, even if the entire medical profession agreed with the American Heart Association.

"This is small consolation to an industry that is currently losing $25 million dollars per week, with a major share of it resulting from the unproven death threat due to cholesterol.
