

Outstanding Farmer

Here's some of the corn selected at random from a bin on the P. Robert Wenger farm, Quarryville RD1, three miles south of the Buck. Wenger grows more than 100 acres of corn per year. He says the quality of the ground varies considerably; it includes some land which is highly productive and some which is stony and hilly, not well suited for corn. He tested 10 acres of his better corn last year and got a yield of 152 bushels per acre. The corn is the backbone of his crop program.

reassess their long-held support for higher education "as a matter of faith." He said Americans are now much more critical, but said there is still "a deep rooted respect for higher education."

He gave numerous examples to illustrate students on campus are doing many things which would be objected to by most people, but they are also doing many things which are admirable. He contended that they do, in the main, represent the homes from which they come.

He said the turmoil stemmed from a combination of revolutionists dedicated to overthrowing our free society, idealists sincerely working for change but impatient and unaware that we don't build by destroying, and "those caught up in the excitement."

He said students have gained additional freedoms during the period of turmoil and won greater rights of freedom of inquiry and debate. He said he sees trends now toward more reasonable efforts to participate in the society. He said the new atmosphere will result in a return of the "long-standing and deep-rooted respect for higher education."

Although there are several colleges in the local area, Dr. Duncan said he sees a need for a community college which would supply a "host" of technical two-year programs. Such a school has been authorized by the state legislature for the Lancaster-Lebanon County area, he noted.

New Recycling Centers

A new edition of the national directory of all-aluminum can-recycling centers at 675 locations in 31 states is now available free from the Aluminum Association, 750 Third Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10017.

The operators of these programs have independently announced that, at the time of delivery, they pay the current market price for aluminum can scrap. This price has been reported in the press to be 10 cents a pound or about one-half cent per 12 oz. can.

They were among four speakers. Kurtz discussed total dairy ration programs, including how a good balance of protein, energy and other nutrients result in top animal health and performance.

Smith discussed the application of crops to feeding dairy herds for the most profitable production.

Also speaking were: Nick Ferrant, Southern division crop specialist, on week control programs on corn and soybeans, and Bob Cooper, milking systems specialist, on feeding and milking systems.

Jack Reed, Agway area farm sales manager, was program chairman. He noted that a similar meeting will be held February 14 at Bird-in-Hand.

He said the meetings place emphasis on farmers growing as many crops as they can on their own farms and showing how to adapt Agway program to what the farmer has.

He explained that farmers must produce more dollars of income per acre in order to keep more people on the farm without buying more acreage.
