The clumps of rhubarb are several inches high and the crocus and daffodils are blooming.

The dark green chives are quite tall and the dianthus has come through the winter in good shape.

The strawberry bed looks the worse for wear as the cows ran over it several times. However, when we begin to pick berries, we'll probably think we have too many anyway.

Another harbinger of Spring is a pomegranate bush in our cellar which is pushing red and yellow leaves. The temperature is the same down there all year long and it gets no natural light, so I'm always amazed to see the first new growth.

As I dig the bush up every Fall and carry it into the house it seems a great inconvenience, but when Spring comes I'm glad I've saved my grandmother's pomegranate bush for another year.

If only it would bloom every year, instead of only occasionally.

Someone is always trying a new program or a new approach to an old problem

Our church has a "Supper for Eight" plan which allows four couples to meet for supper once a month in the home of one of the participants. We meet with a different group of couples each time in order to become better acquainted with other church members. We enjoy it

Our Home and School Association presented a program for parents last week which has been given to many classrooms in the county. This "Circle Green" is an entertaining felt-board type of show with a purpose behind it. Human relations are shown to be an ever-growing and ever-expanding circle which includes not only people like ourselves but all people.

We attended a farm sale in Perry County recently and my children and I delighted in the babbling brook near the house. Our Conestoga flows deep and silently by our meadow.
