Preventing Accidents With Kitchen Knives

Nearly everyone has been nicked by a knife at one time or another, sometimes seriously. A study sponsored by the National Safety Council reported that there are four general causes for knife injuries in the home: wrong use of a knife, or using the wrong knife for a certain task; slips; storage and handling; and sharpening, including testing the sharpness of the blade with a finger.

It's common practice to use the handy kitchen knife for any odd job - screwdriver, prying tool, can opener and punch. For safety's sake, Extension home management specialists at The Pennsylvania State University, remind you to keep these tools handy in the kitchen and reserve the knife for cutting only.

The sharper the knife, the less likely it is to slip. A dull knife needs extra pressure, and the blade can move suddenly and unexpectedly.

Many homemakers have been cut by knives hidden in the dishwasher or a jumbled drawer.

Always wash and dry knives separately. If you know where the knife is, it won't surprise you with a cut. Knife holders either on the wall or in the drawer, will prevent injuries and keep knives sharp. A wooden cutting board also preserves a blade's sharpness, point out the Extension specialists.

Keep a knife sharp, keep it guarded from accidental contact, keep your wits about you when you use it; that's the knack that will keep you from being nicked.

"There's no sense in advertising your troubles. No one will buy them."
