Take Time To Put It Away Right

Whether you plow in the spring, plow in the fall or both, one thing is for sure: It feels good to have the plowing done. But don't let yourself think things are finished until that plow is properly cared for and put away. Taking a little time to put your plow away properly will save you time when you need the plow next and it may save you money by reducing the number of parts you'll need to buy.

With those thoughts in mind, Massey-Ferguson's plow engineers have developed the following check list of things to do when you've finished with your plow:

1. Clean all soil-engaging parts and apply a heavy coating of grease to prevent rust.
  2. Make a thorough visual inspection of the plow. Check for worn or broken parts and make notes of them for replacement during the off season.
  3. Check nuts and bolts for tightness and tighten as needed.
  4. If plow has hydraulic reset, check system pressure. Maintain recommended pressure in accumulator.
  5. If plow is to be stored outside, cover accumulator and hydraulic gauge with waterproof canvas or black plastic film (clear plastic film will attract moisture).
  6. Plug and cover hydraulic couplers to keep them clean and protected from weather.
  7. Store hoses in hose frame.
  8. Check pressure in tires and inflate to recommended pressure.
  9. Store plow in a shed or in a protected place, out of your way but easy to get to when it's plowing time again.
- If you'll take just a few minutes to do those few things, you'll find

The soil-engaging parts of your plow deserve the best treatment you can give them. For longer life and continuing good performance, clean them thoroughly and apply a heavy coating of grease before putting the plow away.

A few minutes spent now to check and tighten all the bolts on your plow will mean a few minutes saved the next time you use it. A quick visual inspection can spot loose nuts and bolts in no time.

not only that your machinery performs a little better and lasts a little longer, but also that it's ready to go sooner next time you need it. Next season, you'll congratulate yourself for good planning.
