have traditionally had a higher proportion of their milk in the class 1 utilization category.

The milk dealers have challenged the milk board's action in court. If the court rules that the price increase granted by the board was illegal, then the daries could, if they wished, continue to pay the old $7.27 price. A spokesman for local dealers, however, said that his company, at least, would be paying producers the full $8.19 class 1 price, and he expects that all other local dairies not in the federal order will do the same. The dealers' quarrel, he pointed out, was with the milk board for not granting a price increase to dealers. He said dealers recognize the need for a price increase to farmers, and they're willing to pay it

The 92-cent increase to farmers was called "helpful, but not a bonanza" by William Pierce, an ag marketing specialist from Penn State. Pierce said the price hike will bring Pennsylvania prices more into

Distinction

The only U.S. president defeated for re-election and later re-elected, thus serving two nonconsecutive terms, was Grover Cleveland (1885-1889 and 1893-1897) line with federal order prices, but it won't make up entirely for the increased production costs which resulted from skyrocketing feed prices in recent months.

Pierce said, though, that feed prices should be coming down by the end of the summer and into the fall, especially if the nation and the world experience a better growing season than last year. A poor season in the U.S., along with a disastrous crop failure in Russia, combined to push feed costs for American farmers up, Pierce said

An interesting sidelight to the retail price increases by dairies has been a swelling of business at local jugging operations. Juggers, selling milk at an average 90-cent to $1.00 a gallon, say they've been selling more milk to more people. Some customers have severed long-standing ties with home deliverymen to carry their milk home in cartons plastic bags, and returnable bottles.
