FOOD "CHOMPION"

Beetles never turn over a new leaf. They eat it. Then your trees, shrubs, vegetables, fruits, flowers. And still they're hungry. That's because these beetles are grubs, the larvae of the beetles, and while they are growing up, like all youngsters, they eat more.

They feed on every kind of plant, from root to fruit and seed. They eat stored food, woods, fabrics, furs, books, and countless other things, including even museum specimens and beetle collections.

Most grubs are soft-bodied, and some, such as the wireworms, are wormlike. They have hard heads and strong jaws and are usually very active. They are more fierce and greedy than the adults. They resemble caterpillars, but they don't have the stubby prolegs that support the abdomen of caterpillars. Most of them are hairless.

Since insects are the most numerous of all the earth's creatures, the beetles are the numerical world champions. And if they all seem to be in your garden or lawn or home at the same time, then use an insecticide containing a chemical called diazinon that not only kills white grubs of Japanese beetles, European and Southern chafers, but over 120 other known garden insects. Called Spectracide, the insecticide is a nonpersistent broad spectrum bug killer.
