"He's a bad dog, stay away from him."
Although people often refer to "good dogs" and "bad dogs," a dog's temperament is not just a matter of good and bad. It is the result of many factors, some of which can be predicted.

It is known that there are certain inbred characteristics affecting a dog's temperament. It is also known that a dog tends to inherit certain responses from its parents.

The Chow Chow, for example, is generally a one man dog. It is reserved, suspicious and indifferent to strangers. It has a will of its own and is not recommended to a home where children are present.

The Poodle, on the other hand, is usually a perfect family pet, especially if children are around. This breed of dog is affectionate, even-tempered and very obedient.

One way to learn more about this complex subject is to discuss your dog's breeding with the veterinarian at the time of purchase. This will help you to gain an understanding of the dog's capabilities to socialize.

The average dog buyer is looking for a pet that can safely join his family and be a companion - especially for children. A nervous dog is not a good companion for children, under almost any circumstances.

A dog that is moody or has a vacillating temperament is potentially dangerous as it may not be able to take playful abuse without retaliating.

Temperament -- and safety -- are not governed by the size of the dog. A serious dog bite can be inflicted by a small Boston Terrier as well as a large Doberman. In fact, there are no breeds in which "bad apples" have not been encountered.

In determining temperament, there are several unfavorable signs you should look out for during the dog's initial period away from mother and littermates: overly nervous reactions to the new situation; indifference to new home and unfriendly to people; erratic responses - acting one way at one time and another way another time - in similar situations.

Illness, accident or psychic trauma may also affect a dog's temperament. Even you, the new owner, may be a bad influence on what may have started out as a pleasant pet.

Clearly, unless you happen to be an expert, don't attempt to train your family dog to be an attack dog. Most dogs, even the gentlest, are protective when the need arises.

Don't permit your children to encourage aggressiveness with too much rough play. Sometimes this gets out of hand. Then a dog will bite out of excitement.

The relationship between family, dog and children is precious. It's worth taking any steps to ensure its success, and your veterinarian is available to help.

Economical Chicken Buys for Small Families

When you buy food for one or two, whether you are a young or an older family, you want to buy efficiently and have the food you need without waste. Mrs. Ruth Buck, Extension foods and nutrition specialist at The Pennsylvania State University, points out that you can buy the chicken parts you like and in the amount you need. Or consider buying whole chickens when they are on sale. Use half the chicken and freeze the other half.
