Local Men Win Poultry Awards

Lancaster Countains took a grand slam at the annual meeting of the Pennsylvania Poultry Federation as three local men received top posts and honors.

Vernon Leininger, a Denver RD2 poultry producer, was elected president of the organization.

Victor F. Weaver, head of Victor F. Weaver Inc., New Holland, was named poultryman of the year.

Robert Graybill, president of Pennfield Corporation, Rohrerstown, was named allied industryman of the year.

The federation is a statewide organization of about 400 members.

Leininger, 46, heads one of the country's larger poultry operations. His family farm has about 90,000 layers in addition to about 400 feeder cattle and 400 hogs.

In addition to producing the eggs, Leininger also processes and packages his own eggs, some of which he markets directly at his farm with most of them going through a private agency.

The Denver area farmer is past president of the Lancaster County Poultry Association and was vice president last year with the state federation along with membership chairman.

Thirty-seven years ago, Weaver and his wife, Edith, sold about 200 chickens weekly at market.

Today, Weaver's corporation ranks as one of the largest independent poultry processing firms in the U.S. and is the ninth largest employer in Lancaster County. The firm has nearly 50 per cent of the total market in the Eastern United States.

His firm employs about 1,100 persons and production totals 150,000 pounds of convenience foods daily.
