Three of the Northeast's top poultrymen sat on a Neppco panel in Philadelphia on Tuesday to discuss the future of the poultry industry from Maryland to Maine. The panelists were, from the left, Robert Graybill, Lancaster, president of Pennfield Corporation, Robert Blades, Easton, Md., president of Bayshore Foods, and Herbert C. Hutchings, Jr., Belfast, Maine, general manager of Penobscot Poultry Company.

Korean 4-H Leader Here on U.S. Tour

Two seasoned youth workers had a chance this week to renew a ten-year friendship that started in Korea.

When Darwin Boyd left Korea two years ago, he stepped down from the post of 4-H program director for the American-Korean Foundation. While he served with the AKF, Boyd came to know and respect Kyong Kon Lim, a young man who grew up on a South Korean rice farm. Lim eventually became Boyd's understudy for the program director's job, and when the Ephrata RD1 native returned home, Lim stepped into the vacancy.

The Korean 4-H program is the second largest in the world, with a membership roll exceeded only by that of the United States. The American-Korean Foundation is a non-profit, non-sectarian group founded at the close of the Korean confrontation. Among the foundation's early backers was President Dwight Eisenhower. Originally, the AKF dealt with the immediate problems of a war-ravaged populace, but over the years, the agricultural program has become the largest single AKF project.

Lim works closely with Korean government officials and international 4-H leaders in helping Korea's rural youth develop an awareness of modern farming techniques. There are two principal projects, both of them ambitious ventures that are helping to reshape the face of rural Korea.

A few miles outside of Seoul, is Sosa, there is a training and demonstration farm which is used to train young men and women in the arts of agriculture and leadership. Every year for

Rutter Children

Showing Guernseys Was Their Summer Project

by: Melissa Piper

It was a busy season for the Rutter family who spent much of their free time this summer and early fall showing their Guernsey cattle at a number of shows. Especially busy on the show circuit this year was fifteen-year-old Cindy and her twelve-year-old brother Timy.

Both Cindy and Timy are members of the York County

Dairy Club and the Roundtown Community Dairy Club and participated in the York County Dairy Roundup, the South Central District Show, the York Fair, and the Pa. State 4-H Show held in conjunction with the All American Dairy Show in Harrisburg.

Cindy won a number of prestigious awards with her cattle placing first in the 4-year-old calf class and receiving senior champion and grand champion honors in the Guernsey class at every competition except the All American Show. At the York County Fair she also won the grand champion showmanship honors.

Cindy also traveled to the National Guernsey Show in Columbus, Ohio, where her cow was selected as a member of the state herd Long-range Prospects Good, But . . .

Near Term Poultry Outlook Seen Bleak

by Dick Wanner
Poultrymen from all over the Northeast met in Philadelphia on Monday and Tuesday to talk about the state of their industry. It was the 43rd annual convention of the Northeastern Poultry Producers Council (Neppco), which represents poultry growers and allied industry men from Ohio east and from Virginia north.

Predictions were the order of the two-day session.

At Tuesday's afternoon's outlook session - held, very appropriately, in the Crystal Ballroom of the Ben Franklin Hotel - speakers talked about the future of the economy, feed costs, prices for broilers, eggs and turkeys, and the subject of world foods needs.

Hugh Stokely, a senior vice president and economist for Philadelphia's Girard Bank, told the conventioners that we're in a recession, not a depression. "It's crucial," he pointed out, "for the public to have confidence that Washington will not permit the economy to slide into depression. The President's program calls for intervention at those points where the pain is most acute - the unemployed, the mortgage and building industry, and utilities.

Stokely said the move toward easier credit that the Federal Reserve is making is not inflationary under present circumstances. "A cautious reliquification of the banking system is inescapable at this point. It means that the recession will cause fewer business failures than it otherwise would."

"The test will come this winter, when the banks feel liquid again, but slower business is holding down the money supply and loan demand, and unemployment is up. In the 1970 slowdown, Washington tried to get the economy moving again by stuffing reserves down the banks' throats. That made recession the springboard for reaccelerated inflation."

"But the public will judge the Administration's success in the anti-inflation fight not tomorrow, but in 1976," said Stokely. "That gives policy a longer-term orientation that should rule out a repeat of the 1970 mistake. Since that mistake has been perceived, it is unlikely to be repeated."

Stokely was followed on the dais by Bruno Tasch, materials manager for Agway, Inc., Syracuse, N.Y. Tasch told the group that he believes government actions such as stopping foreign corn and wheat sales, and prior USDA approval for export sales, is a form of export control. Tasch feels these moves should help to

Ephrata YF Group To Harvest Eby Corn

The Ephrata Area Young Farmers Association has planned a day of work sharing to harvest the corn crop of Clyde Eby. Eby, a former member and past secretary of the organization, died as a result of injuries received in an October 8 automobile accident.

Charles Ackley, the group's advisor, said they will begin work at 9:00 a.m. this Monday, October 28. Ackley said there are about 75 to 100 acres to bring in, and they'll be working until the job is finished. Volunteer help, as well as corn pickers, wagons and elevators are needed.

Lunch contributions would be welcomed, too, Ackley said. Lunch will be served at the Charles Hackman farm, to the rear of Henry Hoover, Inc. The Eby farm is at 1685 W. Main Street, Ephrata, right next to the Hershey Creamery.

For more information, interested volunteers can call Earl G. Martin at 733-4516, or James Hackman at 733-3498.

Timy, Tina and Cindy (standing) Rutter are the children of Mr. and Mrs. Leo Rutter, 53 Lightner Rd. in York. Over the past few years they have won numerous awards for showing their Guernsey cattle.
