

Gilman Appointed

Ed Gilman has been appointed Director of Customer Services for New Breeds Industries, according to a recent announcement by Ancel Armstrong, President-General Manager of NBI.

Ed will be responsible for aiding potential customers who have little or no experience with the new breeds. He will act as liaison between the customer, distributor, technician, and NBI. Ed will provide information and assistance on health and registration procedures, and will be aiding future purebred breeders to locate and buy F1 cattle.

A Marine Corps Vietnam veteran, with a solid background in the livestock and grain industries, Ed has a degree in Animal Science from South Dakota State University. Ed comes to New Breeds Industries from Minnesota Valley Breeders Association, where he

ED ESHLEMAN'S WASHINGTON REPORT

In the congressional elections to be held on November 5, the American people have a choice to make. It is not necessarily the choice being talked about most in the news media - choosing between Democrats and Republicans. Rather it is the choice of whether people want Congress run with conservative - moderate philosophy or with a liberal philosophy.

This is a very basic choice that goes to the heart of the problem of big, expensive government. The liberal philosophy that now prevails in Congress is in large part responsible for the astronomical rise in the cost of government.

Why? It has to do with the way conservative-moderates look at people problems and the precisely opposite way the liberals look at the same problems.

The liberals in Congress consistently look at a problem and respond with a program that penalizes 100 percent of the people involved to get at the 5 or 10 percent of the people at fault. The conservative-moderate looks for ways to use present law or, if necessary, write new laws to take action against the 5 or 10 percent violators.

Take the meat inspection laws as an example. Certainly something should be done about the guy who is putting sawdust in frankfurters. But he represents only a very small minority of meatpackers. Yet, the laws voted by Congress burdened all meatpackers with usually unnecessary and often arbitrary regulations that have even forced some of the small packers in our area out of business.

Exactly the same philosophy of penalizing the majority out of fear of confronting the offensive minority has brought us burdensome Occupational Health and Safety, Nursing Home Safety, and other costly regulations too numerous to mention. Gun control proposals represent the same kind of thinking.

People might legitimately ask why so many conservative-moderates end up voting for such laws if there is any real difference in their philosophy. The answer lies in the choice we are given. Because the liberal philosophy prevails, the bills we are asked to vote on reflect that point of view. Therefore, the choice is often whether to vote to do nothing about a admittedly bad situation or vote for a less-than-acceptable bill designed to do something.

But if the American people would vote to change the philosophical majority in Congress, the legislation we are asked to consider would take a different kind of approach. Then the liberals would have the choice of accepting a conservative-moderate solution or doing nothing.

The basic change, however, would be in the way government operates and the cost of operating it. We would see government going after only those who are violating the law or taking advantage of a public trust and leaving hard-working, honest people to go about their lives without government interference. And, that alone, would end bureaucratic expansion and save billions of tax dollars.

Italian Seasoning
Listed below are a few handy tricks to use with Italian Seasoning:

- Heat 1 can tomato juice with ½ teaspoon Italian Seasoning for three minutes. Strain and chill. Serve with antipasto.
- For an easy antipasto serve a platter centered with 1 cup cottage or ricotta cheese mixed with ¼ teaspoon Italian Seasoning. Surround with thinly sliced cold cuts, melon wedges, carrot sticks, plus artichoke hearts and mushrooms marinated in French dressing seasoned with Italian Seasoning.
- For added flavor to packaged or canned soups and chowders — season with ½ teaspoon Italian Seasoning to every 3 cups of soup.
- Blend ½ teaspoon of Italian Seasoning into ½ package of prepared pie crust mix when making pastry for meat pie.
- Blend ½ teaspoon Italian Seasoning into each 4-serving package of instant mashed potato.
