

Direct marketing gets biggest purse

Ag research programs funded

HARRISBURG - The Agriculture Research Committee recently approved continuing 18 projects for fiscal year 1976-77 at a cost of $372,655, it was disclosed last week by Pennsylvania Agriculture Secretary Raymond J. Kerstetter.

Kerstetter, who was elected chairman of the nine-member committee, noted that less than $28,000 would be available for new projects to be considered for approval sometime next month. Funds for agricultural research are derived from a yearley appropriation of about $400,000 from harness and horse racing proceeds.

"Last year ten new projects were approved," observed Kerstetter. "The committee felt they were good projects worth continuing. That is why there are few funds left over to initiate new projects."

The largest project to be continued is Producer-Consumer Marketing, a project shared by Edinboro College, the state Department of Agriculture and Pennsylvania State University had the next largest share of research funds for its continuation with an award of $50,500. The project, considered important because it may offer a twin solution to the mounting cost of waste disposal and fertilizers, involves the testing of sludge samples from six treatment plants around the state.

Edinboro College has been investigating the legal, insurance and taxation problems facing buying clubs. The college is also trying to form a federation of buying clubs in northwestern Pennsylvania. Edinboro was awarded $25,190 for its share of the research, $7,000 below its original request of $32,190.

OIC, a manpower training organization, is involved in coordinating city buying clubs and in training men to work in cooperative warehouses and other food receiving and distribution points. OIC was awarded $50,000.

The Agriculture Department, which has a task force working on the development of direct marketing between primary producers and consumers, cut its own request from $40,000 to $16,000.

Besides direct marketing and sewage sludge, other projects approved for continuation are:

Computerized forecasting of potato late blight to minimize pesticide use, $11,069, Penn State; maize germ plasm study, $4,170,

Penn State; control of cork spot in apples, $17,400, Penn State; poultry waste and egg and chick contamination, $15,470, Penn State; tomato production, $4,988, Penn State; beef forage practices, $15,081, Penn State; production of grapes for wine, $12,760, Penn State.

Also, methane gas production from farm waste, $17,539, Penn State; wheat spindle streak mosaic disease, $13,215, Penn State; canned mushroom spoilage, $25,000, Penn State; corn stalk rot, $22,350, Penn State; horse respiratory disease, $20,068, University of Pennsylvania; chronic diarrhea in horses, $20,554,

University of Pennsylvania; rural studies information program at eight colleges, Mansfield, Bloomsburg, and Lock Haven Colleges, Pennsylvania State University, Lycoming College, Susquehanna

University, Bucknell University and Williamsport Area Community College, $5,950; conifer pests, $14,683, Agriculture Department; and bovine leukemia, $10,488, University of Pennsylvania.

Recovery seen for Soviet grain outlook

WASHINGTON - Soviet grain production this year should recover sharply from 1975's disastrous crop, if weather is fairly normal, according to a report released recently by the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Economic Research Service (ERS).

A grain crop of 205 million metric tons is targeted by the Soviets - 65 million metric tons above the actual 1975 harvest, but 10 million below what was planned for that year. ERS analysts judge that based on past trends in grain yields, the Soviet goal could be achieved under normal conditions from about 124 million hectares, which would be somewhat less than the area harvested last year. This year's winter grains suffered above average damage from cold weather, but soil moisture supplies in the eastern spring grain area are better than at the beginning of the growing season last year.
