

Grange apprehensive about Act

WASHINGTON - The country's oldest and second largest farm organization, the National Grange, is expressing apprehension about the Young Farmers' Homestead Act, a bill currently before the Senate subcommittee on Agricultural Credit and Rural Electrification. John Scott, Master of the National Grange, said the bill will advocate the creation of a government agency to buy, lease and sell farm land. He said the Grange fears this could lead to socialized farming and that farm ownership would shift from private hands to government. He said the Board responsible for deciding who could buy, sell or lease farm land could become an agricultural czar.

Scott said the most important feature in any new program to assist young farmers is to provide a profit incentive. He said the Grange will continue its support of new long-term, low interest rate loan programs and changes in federal estate tax laws to make it less of a financial burden to pass farm land from one generation to the next. He said if young family farmers can be assured they can work in cooperation with government, in supplying food and fiber and do so at a reasonable profit, then the future of American agriculture will be secure.
