extent of worm infestation. Many young dairy animals have been on the farm for many years. Feeder calves imported from states south of Pennsylvania may also be heavily infected. Don't waste feed on wormy animals. A few dollars spent for worming materials will come back many fold through more feed efficiency.

TO HAVE PROPER EQUIPMENT

The handling of livestock requires certain equipment for best results. We are aware of many dairymen and cattle feeders who do not have loading chutes or catch gates in which to treat their animals. For dairymen, catch gates may not be very important because most animals can be restrained in stalls or stanchions; however, to the cattle feeder a chute and head gate is very important; the implanting of growth pellets or the treating of sick animals certainly warrants good equipment. Don't expect local veterinarians to be "cowboys" when treating feedlot cattle.
