over the binder in the same manner keeping the binder flat and pulling the weaving cane tight. Finish corners by carrying the ends of the binder down through the hole and driving a soft wood peg into the hole. Cut the peg off even with the chair frame. The cane should be wet and pliable enough to turn corners and loop over the binder easily.

When finishing a round chair seat use one continuous piece of binder which starts and ends at the same hole.

Use a peg to secure this binder when the looping is completed. Cut the peg even with the chair frame.

Several diligent weavers at the workshop led by Mrs. Franz said the first three steps were somewhat tedious but when they started the diagonal weaving, the resulting pattern was so bewitching that they just had to keep going. Creating the six-sided holes was rewarding enough to keep them at their tasks even though they would from time to time make a mistake or the cane would split or their back or knees would tire from remaining in the same position for an unusually long time. Some innovative weavers decided to put their projects on a table and work standing rather than stooped.

Whatever your reasons are for starting to cane or whatever you devise to use to hold the cane in place or how you stand or stoop to cane, you can try something new that may bring you hours of rewarding enterprise at a very low cost.
