er sister-in-law took emnants and did some manipulating to get the design just the way they wanted it. When they were finished, they were pleased with the results.

"We were working with uneven pieces, but we managed to have some symmetry," she explains.

After the job was complete, Mr. Garber constructed a cased-in bed and a headboard, which Mrs. Garber then covered.

Another outstanding segment of the Garber home is the combined living room and dining room which features a touch of Williamsburg with a colonial affect.

"I wanted a formal room, but it had to be warm," Mrs. Garber says. "It just had to be 'me.'"

The room was done in Williamsburg blue and red with cream walls.

To add the "touch of me" she desired, Mrs. Garber has bedecked the room with flower arrangements, paintings, crafts, and a copper woodbox in front of the fireplace.

"My home is 'busy,'" she concedes, "and, Williamsburg is much plainer than this, so I added the colonial touch."

the before-mentioned butterfly cupboard with an illuminated glass collection. This corner cupboard had originally been in the den, but the Garbers felt it belonged in the dining room, so they moved it to its present location.

The den, itself, is another interesting room. The most outstanding feature is the bookcase along the East wall, which was fashioned out of paint shelves from an interior decorating store and refinished two years ago.

"The family thought I was crazy when I brought these home," Mrs. Garber laughs, "but, they fit in place perfectly and have worked in well."

The cupboards in her kitchen were another project which took a lot of time.

"I took three months to refinish these cupboards, and may family suffered along with me," she says with a grimace and a roll of her eyes when she things back a year.

After all the work that went into the refinishing, the family now finds the room rewarding, because from all appearances, they installed a completely new kitchen.

"You can really do a lot with what you have at your disposal," Mrs. Garber reminds.

The interior of the house is not the only part that has been remodeled. Mr. Garber recently finished a patio in the front of the building which the family really enjoys. And, he is now constructing a 60,000 pullet house to add to an already operating 55,000 bird house. One thing is certain - if you like crafts, interior decorating, landscaping, or farming operations, you'll enjoy a visit to the James Garber home.

A distinctive feature of the Garber dining room is the butterfly corner cupboard filled with glassware collected by Mrs. Garber. Here, she sets the table as she plans to have it decorated for the Heritage Trail tour.
