AFBF supports ag research

WASHINGTON, D. C. — The American Farm Bureau Federation told members of Congress recently that monies invested in agricultural research will return rewarding benefits. "The result of this type of useful government spending has been demonstrated by the Department of Agriculture and state agricultural experiment stations," Robert B. Delano, vice-president of the American Farm Bureau Federation said.

In a statement presented before a House Agriculture Subcommittee, Delano pointed out that "Adequate research is the basis for more efficient production and marketing; lower costs; and new food, forest and fiber products." And he added:

"This leads to improved living for all Americans." research effort and avoid duplication.

The Farm Bureau spokesman pointed out that expanded research can help to find "(1) solutions to national energy problems, (2) better solutions to agriculture's environmental concern, (3) acceptable controls for diseases, noxious weeds, and insects, (4) new crop varieties with higher nutritional values and varieties suited to mechanical handling and processing (5) cultural practices to improve soil and water conservation, (6) solutions to marketing problems, (7) additional uses for agricultural byproducts."

Delano, a Virginia farmer and president of the Virginia Farm Bureau Federation pointed out to the Congressmen that increases in the percentage of research funds allocated to federal installations has caused a trend toward centralization.

"This trend should be reversed. We urge funding of the State Agricultural Experiment Stations Research Facilities Act," he said. And he added:

"We encourage interstate cooperation to intensify research effort and avoid duplication. "Transportation and other marketing research is not receiving an adequate share of the USDA research dollar," Delano said. "The regionalization of this research effort through the Agricultural Research Service has downgraded it and made it less effective."

The Virginia farmer told the Subcommittee members that Farm Bureau supports legislation which recognizes the need for research in all segments of agriculture and our food system. "Food distribution accounts for a larger share of the consumer's food expenditures than raw agricultural products. As a consequence, additional research is needed in processing, marketing, and transportation as well as the factors which affect the production of raw products," he said.

The American Farm Bureau Federation is the nation's largest general farm organization representing over 2.6 million member families. The Federation is headquartered in Park Ridge, Illinois.
