

Pork cookout promotion set

DES MOINES, Iowa — A massive pork cookout promotion will be conducted this Summer by the National Pork Producers Council and its 35 member states, according to Lou Lalko, NPPC promotion director.

"Cooking out in the summer is becoming one of our nation's favorite pastimes," Lalko said. "With an ample supply of pork for consumers at very reasonable prices, we hope to convince millions of Americans to cook out with pork."

The three-month intense campaign is designed to move millions of pounds of fresh pork to consumers, Pork Council officials said. During June, July and August, the promotion will be seen by more than 85 million consumers.

The campaign will include a national newspaper and magazine schedule plus an extensive in-store promotional effort.

"Retailers and packers continue to request in-store point-of-purchase material," Lalko said. "For last year's October Porkfest (the Pork Council's biggest promotion of the year) we sent out more than 80,000 posters and 380,000 meat case strips to retailers across the country. For our cookout promotion, we expect to send out at least 100,000 posters and 500,000 meat case strips.

Six different ads during the three-month campaign will be placed in over 60 major U.S. cities. The ads will be placed in an area that accounts for more than 45 per cent of the U.S. food store sales.

The ads will appear on the same day as food store ads. It will offer a free recipe booklet if the reader will send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to the NPPC. Pork Council officials expect to receive more than 50,000 requests for the booklet.

Five of the nation's most popular magazines featuring recipes and outdoor living sections will be used in the magazine schedule. In June, one-half page ads will appear in Woman's Day, American Home, Southern Living, Weight Watchers and Sunset.

To be eligible for the national contest, the contestants must have been selected by a state pork producer organization as its state's pork cookout champion. Contestants must enter the national contest with the same pork item and recipe used in the state contest.

Progress of rural development charted by Dept. of Agriculture

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Rural America continues to make substantial progress in jobs, income, population retention and growth, and housing, according to a new report to Congress from the Secretary of Agriculture.

Nonmetropolitan nonfarm wage and salary employment has been increasing over twice as fast as metropolitan employment since 1970. Employment in agriculture has stabilized in the 1970's, and mining employment has risen after long-term declines. Despite the progress, wage rates continue generally lower in nonmetropolitan areas, as do labor participation rates, the report says. Thus, family incomes are lower in nonmetropolitan communities. In addition, although substantial gains have been made, job opportunities generally are not as good as in metropolitan areas.

The report notes that population movement into nonmetropolitan counties also has continued at a rapid pace since 1970, in sharp contrast to the 1960's and earlier. From 1970 to 1975, 1.8 million more people moved into than out of nonmetropolitan counties. During 1960-70, these counties lost three million, net, from migration.

Nonmetropolitan areas are those outside the nation's 265 standard metropolitan statistical areas. The total nonmetropolitan area of the United States is made up of 2,469 of the nation's 3,097 counties.

The report also assesses rural education, health care, solid waste management, water and sewer systems, public passenger transportation, fire prevention and control, crime and law enforcement, and the status of handicapped and elderly people. The nonmetropolitan sector lags behind the metropolitan sector in most of these areas, the report notes.

A second part of the report summarizes promising developments in rural schools and discusses new federal initiatives in rural health care, manpower and employment services, fire prevention and control, services to the handicapped, and providing community development information to local governments. A third part of the report presents results of a survey of state main rural problems and rural development priorities.

The annual report, "Rural Development Progress Fourth Annual Report of the Secretary of Agriculture to the Congress," is required under the Rural Development Act of 1972. Single copies are available from the Information Staff, Rural Development Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D.C. 20250.
