G. Watts is cattleman of year

BELLWOOD, Pa.,—Gilbert Watts, of Logansprings Farm, an Angus breeder, has been named recipient of the 1977 "Cattleman of the Year" Award sponsored by the Pennsylvania Cattlemen's Association.

Watts received the award, a plaque, at the association's recent annual meeting on the Pennsylvania State University Campus.

According to Professor Ben Morgan, Penn State Extension animal scientist,

Watts was cited for leadership in improving the state's livestock industry and his livestock feeding and management practices.

The award recipient, who began his farm operation in 1921, was a pioneer in feeding horticultural by-products to steers in 1940. This work demonstrated that these materials were efficient converters of feed to meat.

Watts was named a Pennsylvania Master Farmer in 1959 and served as secretary and president of the Pennsylvania Angus Association.

He was recognized as an outstanding seed stock producer by the Beef Improvement Federation in 1974. In addition to his farming activities, he served his community, county, state, and nation in numerous agricultural activities.

He was one of the first cattle breeders in the Commonwealth to do on-farming-testing of beef cattle. He worked closely with the development of the Pennsylvania Meat Animal Evaluation Center and served as the cattle representative of its governing board for many years.

Watts also served on the committee that developed the Pennsylvania Bull Testing and Sale Program.

Calves drink sour milk

UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. - At Penn State University's recently held Dairy Day, Dr. Paul R. Shellenberger, associate professor of dairy science reported on experiments he conducted using sour colostrum as a starter feed for young calves.

"The excess colostrum produced during the first days following freshening in most cases will feed a calf for 17 days," Shellenberger emphasized. "In order to save this valuable calf feed, we worked on a system to store it and make it available for new-born calves over a period of time."

Two methods used at Penn

State involve freezing and fermentation, the dairy specialist noted. It is stored in 20-gallon plastic garbage cans. He pointed out that colostrum can be stored for two or three weeks, based on experiments. Calves will eat a calf starter ration at an earlier age if colostrum is fed from birth.
