

Bergland cites foreign market development

WASHINGTON, D.C. - A joint government-industry program to help develop new foreign markets for U.S. agricultural products has been successful even though it has operated under restraints some U.S. competitors do not have, Secretary of Agriculture Bob Bergland said recently.

Bergland told members of the Agricultural Cooperator Council, a non-profit group representing agricultural producers that works with the U.S. Department of Agriculture's (USDA) Foreign Agricultural Service (FAS) to develop overseas markets, that their program has spent much less money than most of their government-funded competitors.

An example, Bergland said, is the cooperator program that increased U.S. blueberry exports to Europe from $1.3 million in 1972 to more than $6 million in 1976. The program spent $12,000 in government funds over five years, he said, while a Canadian effort to develop the same market spent $50,000 a year over the five years.

Some proceeds of the sale of surplus commodities under P.L. 480 are used to finance the cooperator program, which is administered by FAS. Secretary Bergland said this year the program will spend about $35 million - $12 million in federal funds, $10 million from cooperators, and $13 million from foreign "third party" cooperators.

Bergland also told the group they have to face their competitors "without export subsidies and trade barriers, which I'm very much opposed to."

"And we'll have to do it without destroying competition that will come from some of the developing nations, something a big country like the United States could do easily if it wanted."

He cited as an example Malaysia, which he visited on his recent Asian tour. A land reform program there has given people "a stake in their country they didn't have before."

"The palm oil they produce will compete with our soybeans," Secretary Bergland said. "But I regard that competition as healthy, legitimate and fair. If we withhold our support and destroy that economic plan, then we would destroy Malaysia. And we would invite Communist aggression there."

The secretary cited six nations that received U.S. aid in the past 22 years and later became commercial customers. They are: Spain, Taiwan, Korea, Poland, Brazil and India.

The Secretary said the United States also must work to restore credibility with some commercial trading partners and P.L. 480 recipients. He said several nations expressed concern about quality control on shipments during his Asian trip and he assured them the new U.S. grain standards law would remove such abuses.

Auto Service Tips

The door latch on your automobile is a safety feature, designed to keep passengers in the car where, statistics show, chances of survival are best in the event of an accident. Latches are designed to keep the door closed, even when the lock button is not pushed down. Door latches of well-used car should be checked for tightness. The handle or lever should move at least one-fourth inch before releasing the latch.
