

Achievement Day results:

[Continued from Page 21] friendships, and travel. Occasionally, there are a few special treats which come along. Top athletes, for example, will go to Penn State later this year for a special sports weekend.

Continuing with highlights of the competition, Cumberland and Dauphin County 4-H'ers left the Penn State campus with two first-place honors apiece. Lebanon County had one such honor. Roxann Leib of Mechanicsburg R2 garnered a third place in flower judging to lead her county team to first-place honors in the state. Other team members were Tammy Hoy of Carlisle R6 who placed eighth; Marcia Bowman of Newville (21st); Jill Barrick of Carlisle R5 and Karen Hornbaker of Shippensburg R5.

Judy Long of Mechanicsburg R2 tied for first place in horse judging to lead her team to a second place in the state. Betsy Nichols of Mechanicsburg was eighth in that contest, which was entered by more than 200 4-H'ers from across the Commonwealth. Rounding out the team were Debbie King of Mechanicsburg and Sue Muller of Carlisle.

Cumberland County's

meats judging team placed second, with Karen Strock of Mechanicsburg leading the attack. She was fourth-high individual in the state. Paula Deitch of Mechanicsburg placed sixth, and Cindy Brackbill, also of Mechanicsburg, placed 12th.

The Dairy Bowl team from Cumberland County, consisting of Joan Davidson and Mike Dyarman from Shippensburg, Cindy Whistler from Carlisle, and Danny Mains of Newville, placed third in the state.

Janice Davidson of Shippensburg and Sherri Webber, Ruth and Helen McCulloch, all from Newville, captured a medal with their consumer presentation. The medal award is the highest given in that contest, as well as a number of others.

The pride of Dauphin County's 4-H program is Brian Watlington of Harrisburg. The youth was rated as the outstanding senior male athlete and led the physical fitness team to a seventh place. Others on the team were John Martin and Heide Gamache, both from the capital city, and Maureen Comiskey of Hummelstown. The consumer presentation team from Dauphin County ties for first in the state. It consisted of Holly Sheppard, Patti Haughney and Mary Louise Wise, all of whom are from Hershey.

Lebanon's star in the competition was Bob Bensing of Lebanon. He captured first place in the state in a contest which one might expect to have a girl win. But girls won the automotive contest as well as numerous others, which only a few years ago were dominated by boys. So Bensing scored one for his side by being the best vegetable judge. He led teammates Ken and Kevin Hoke and Greg Allwein to a second-place team victory. All are from Lebanon. Hoke was 12th in the individual ratings.

Lebanon also had the second-place horticulture team, with Sue Bomberger providing the highest individual performance for the team. Making her home at Annville R3, she placed fifth in the state. Others on the team were Melissa Weaver of Fredericksburg (9th); Jim Connor Lebanon, (11th); and Lisa Yordy of Palmyra.

Following are county-by-county details of the contests:

LEBANON COUNTY

Tom and Daniel Seaman of Grantville placed 25th and 15th, respectively on the junior livestock judging team. A blue-ribbon eight place performance was turned in by Mike Brajkovich, also from Grantville, to lead the junior livestock judging team to a tie for third place in the state. The fourth member of the team was Lebanon's Tom Arnold.

Kelly Lauer of Lebanon

earned a Presidential Award in physical fitness with her fourth place in that contest. Others to win the prestigious honor were Carol Cadwallader, and Tom Minnich, both of Lebanon. The team, which was rounded out by Kevin Boltz, also from Lebanon, placed third in the state. The County's 4-H delegation numbered 34.

YORK COUNTY

This year's giant in 4-H honors boasts three second-place individuals in the state and a second-place team. Sandy Deel is second-best in
