

My thoughts

"Excuse me," I yelled above the noise. A head popped out from under the car, and my stomach jumped a high hurdle. He looked as though someone had dragged him off of the set of an Alfred Hitchcock movie and put him right to work banging the damaged fender into place.

"Hope you get your car fixed," I croaked in response to his look of 'what can I do for you?' With that I hustled off toward the nearest thing that caught my eye.

That "thing" was a well-meaning public-minded citizen directing traffic leaving the parking area.

Taking off at a full gallop, I cut across the moving traffic, ran up to his side, and was about to say "Excuse me," when a headlight beam reflected off his face.

My stomach, which had settled down slightly, took another flying leap. If that other guy looked like dracula, this fellow looked like he came from outer space.

My "public-minded citizen", who was so kindly helping to direct traffic, was actually a prankster with a rubber mask over his face, directing traffic in order to show off. So much for him.

Growing tired of the hostile world of draculas and men from outer space, I headed to the cattle barns for refuge. Not more than a minute after I stepped into the familiar environment I was rescued--this time by a cowboy out of a western movie--who, with the help of a friendly policeman, fixed up Frank in no time.

So, if I'm ever late to a meeting in the upcoming months, you'll know where I'll be--looking for a hitching post to tie my horse, a welcome relief to a pooped policecar.
